

Dyslexia affects a significant portion of the population, and traditional teaching methods often fail to meet the needs of dyslexic learners. These individuals frequently experience difficulties with reading, writing, and comprehension, leading to frustration and disengagement in educational settings